A Marlin ate my Dingo !

" What the hell are you talking about stupid ?"

" Marlin don't eat dingos " I hear you say.

How do you get the dingo to sit still as you pierce his sensitive snout with a 14/0 hook ?

How do you stop him biting you with his powerful jaws as you poke a rigging needle through his eye sockets when you bridle rig him ?

Do you have to cut his tail off to stop him spinning when trolled dead as a skip bait ?

All relevant questions my friend, if you're talking about trolling natural baits for big marlin, but we are talking about artificial dingos. That's right an artificial dingo with a tournament winning, record breaking pedigree, the 'J.B. Dingo.'

Since its introduction in 2004 the 'Dingo' has established itself as one of the best Big Blue Marlin lures in Australia, with numerous blues over 200kg and several over the 300kg mark. Big Black Marlin and countless Striped Marlin over 100kg have also felt the bite of the 'J.B Dingo.' But it's not just Marlin, just about every gamefish has been taken by a 'Dingo.' Lots of big Yellowfin over 70kg, massive Bluefin up to 167kg, big Bull Dolphinfish to 24kg, even the marlins freaky cousin the Shortbilled Spearfish, and the list goes on. So what makes the 'Dingo' so attractive to gamefish ?

It's the subtle baitfish like action. It doesn't turn the ocean to foam, or look like you have a Whipper Snipper in the spread. The 'Dingo' casually swims along with a nice consistent baitfish like action that screams " Bite Me " to all gamefish. Woof ! 🐾
